Why exterior activity still matters.

Why Rodents May Still Come Around

After exclusion work is complete, what is your plan to help keep rodents away from the outside of your home?

Your own property conditions

Fallen fruit, nuts, bird seed, pet droppings, standing water, open trash, dense vegetation, or branches touching the home can continue attracting rodents and other pests.

Natural surroundings

Rural lots, wooded areas, creeks, open space, dense vegetation, or nearby trees can support ongoing rodent movement.

Nearby disruption

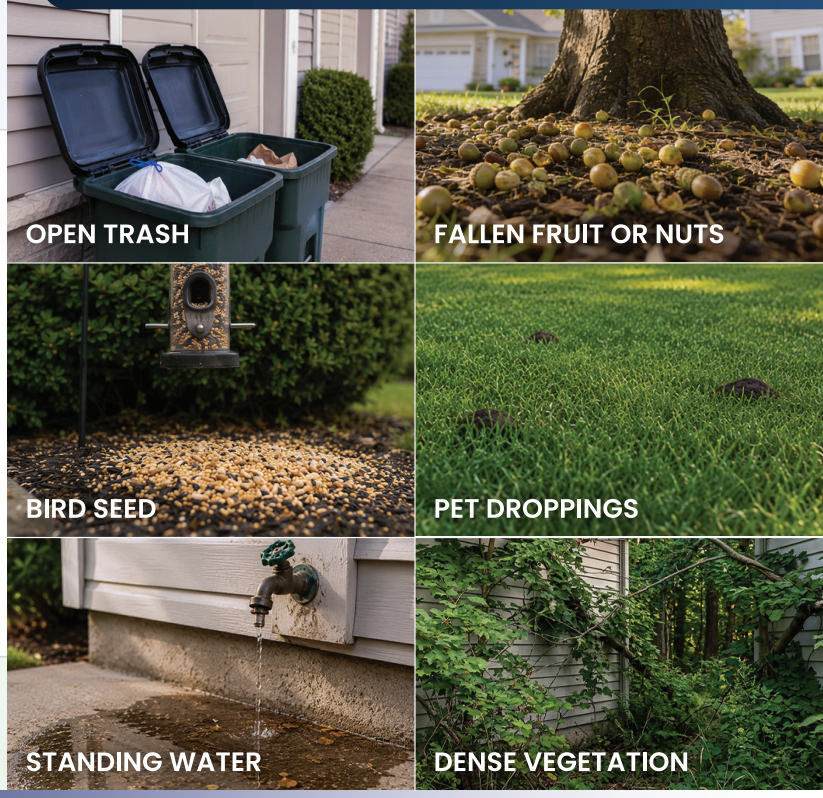

Construction, remodeling, demolition, or utility work nearby can push rodent activity into surrounding properties.

Neighboring properties

A neighbor's open trash, fallen fruit, pet droppings, clutter, or poorly maintained yard can attract rodents close to your home.

Even when exclusion is working, exterior pressure may still exist. Exclusion helps keep rodents out of sealed areas; Rodent Defense helps reduce activity around the property through ongoing exterior rodent control.

Problem Areas

How Rodent Control And Pest Control Support Exclusion

1. EXCLUSION keeps rodents out
2. RODENT CONTROL helps keep rodents away
3. PEST CONTROL helps reduce exterior pest pressure

More Complete Property Protection

IDEAL FOR HOMES WITH:

- ✓ Outdoor rodent activity spotted
- ✓ Fruit or nut trees nearby
- ✓ Heavy vegetation or ivy growth
- ✓ Trash areas close to home
- ✓ Standing water or pest attractants
- ✓ Nearby construction or remodeling
- ✓ Neighboring rodent pressure

IMPORTANT:

RodentDefense does not replace exclusion work. It is designed to work alongside exclusion by helping reduce exterior rodent activity after the home has been sealed.
